Bnff. GOMME Games (1894) I. 409. Abd. The children . . . select one to be 'Namie' and another to be 'Guessie.' Guessie goes far enough away not to hear what is going on, while Namie gives each child a name, e.g. Daisy, Lily, Pot, Pail, Cat, Dog, &c. (Favourite names on Donside are 'mousie amo' the meal,' 'the burnt witch,' 'the hen on the hot girdle,' &c.) All being named, Namie calls out, 'Luckie, luckie, yer breid's burnin', Gin I had a gully, I'd be turnin'.' Guessie hereupon comes up, spits three times on the ground, and Namie says, 'That's aneuch. Come choise me oot, come choise me in, come choise me in to Daisy.' If Guessie hits on the right person, that person goes to Guessie's side, otherwise to Namie's side. This goes on till all are divided except one. Then a name is chosen for the last one, unknown to Guessie. 'Apple, pear, plum, tobacco, or a drum, Or a dancin' Jacky Tar.' If Guessie answers correctly which of these names has been chosen, the child goes to Guessie's side, otherwise to Namie's. The side numerically the stronger is formed into two and two, hands joined, in line. Through this tunnel, the other party passes singly, to undergo 'clouts' on the head from the others, using their caps with the loose hand. They have to run the gauntlet three times (G.W.).

NECK, sb.[2] Yks. Pem. Som. Dev. Cor. Also written nek Cor.[2]; and in forms knack, nack Dev. [nɛk.]

1. The last sheaf of corn in the harvest-field; see below.

s.Pem. (W.M.M.) Som. The reapers, each one with his reap-hook overhead as high as his bare arm could reach, were drawn around in a ring. In the middle stood the last sheaf as big as three, and tied about with three binds; and close to it long Jims, holding up a knitch of ruddy corn—a double handful tightly bound just below the ears, with the straw plaited together smooth and round into the shape of a bee-butt. Then they hallooed again and again, 'We have a-done. An' all a-done; A neck—a neck—a neck,' and danced and whooped 'Hurrah! Hurrah!' until they were hoarse, Raymond Men o' Mendip (1898) xvi; The harvest supper was spread, and midway down the table stood the neck. Not a drop had touched it, that was the main thing, for the harvester who got it wet was not to drink that night, and all the women in the house might lie in wait, however they could, to throw water by the bucketful at any who came in, ib. xvii. w.Som.[1] It is still the custom at the cutting of the last field of wheat on a farm, to take a large handful of ears and plait the straws into a fanciful shape, . . called the neck. This is still to be seen in many West country farm-houses, usually hanging to the kitchen ceiling or the bacon-rack until supplanted by a new one at the next harvest. Dev. At Werington when a farmer finishes his reaping, a small quantity of the ears of the last corn are twisted or tied together into a curious kind of figure, which is brought home with great acclamations, hung up over the table, and kept till the next year. It is called 'a knack.' The reapers whoop and hollow, 'A knack! a knack! well cut! well bound! well shocked!' Brand Pop. Antiq. ed. 1813) I. 442; Bray Desc. Tamar and the Tavy (1836) I. Lett. xix. n.Dev. We've hailed tha neck, Rock Jim an' Nell (1867) st. 3; One of the party had the 'nack' secreted on his person. A member of the farmer's family tried to discover the possessor before he entered the kitchen, in order to drench him, or, as they said, 'wet the nack' with a bucket of water; failing to do this a larger quantity of beer had to be supplied to the men, N. & Q. (1878) 5th S. x. 359. Cor. Fetch along my second-best glass, under the Dook o' Cumberland's picter i' the front parlour, 'longside o' last year's neck, 'Q.' Three Ships (1890) i; Cor.[1] Neck, a miniature sheaf of wheat with four plaited arms, intertwined with everlastings, and the more durable of flowers. The stalks of wheat brought down by the last sweep of the scythe are brought home in thankful triumph, and woven as described. In the evening the sheaf or zang is taken into the mowhay, where are assembled all the harvest party. A stout-lunged reaper proclaims: 'I hav'en! I hav'en! I hav'en!' Another loud voice questions: 'What hav'ee? What hav'ee? What hav'ee?' 'A neck! A neck! A neck!' is the reply; and the crowd take up, in their lustiest tones, a chorus of 'Wurrah.' General merriment follows, and the draughts of ale or cider are often deep. The neck may be seen hanging to the beam of many of our farm-houses between harvest and Christmas eve, on which night it is given to the master bullock in the chall.

2. Phr. (1) to call, cry, or hollo the neck, see below; see cry the neck, s.v. Cry, 12 (19), see hollowing the neck, s.v. Hollo, 1 (6); (2) to carry the neck, to finish the harvest; (3) to cut the neck, to cut the last handful of corn; see cut the neck, s.v. Cut, v.[1] 3 (18).

(1) Dev. Hartland Forest (1871) 115; The reapers then proceed to a high place, . . to use their own words, to 'holla the nack.' The man who bears this offering . . . elevates it, whilst all the other labourers form themselves into a circle about him: each holds aloft his hook, and in a moment they all shout . . . 'Arnack, arnack, arnack, wehaven, wehaven, wehaven.' This is repeated three several times, Bray Desc. Tamar and the Tavy (1836) I. Lett. xix. n.Dev. The curious old custom of 'calling the nack.' The reapers were gathered round a pond, where they sang three times, first in low tones, gradually increasing in loudness, the words: 'Arnack, arnack, arnack, We haven, we haven, we haven, God send the nack,' N. & Q. (1878) 5th S. x. 359. Cor. N. & Q. (1878) 5th S. x. 51; Cor.[2] This crying of anék is a harvest ceremony, probably of very great antiquity. . . The reaper, having cut with his reaping hook a last handful of wheat, held and waved it high over his head, as with a loud and joyful voice he cried, 'I have et, I have et, I have et.' On which the other harvesters standing around shouted, 'What have 'e? What have 'e? What have 'e?' And then arose the triumphant cry, 'Anék, Anék, Anék.—Hooraa!' (2) n.Dev. They carried the neck a Tuesday backalong, i.e. the harvest was finished, N. & Q. (1878) 5th S. x. 51. (3) w.Yks. Leeds Merc. Suppl. (July 11, 1896).

NEED-FIRE, sb. Sc. Nhb. Dur. Cum. Wm. Yks. Also written neid- Sc. (JAM.); and in form neats- s.Sc. [nī·d-faiə(r.] 1. Ignition produced by the friction of two pieces of wood, esp. used as a charm against murrain and other cattle-diseases; see below. Cf. forced fire, s.v. Forced (2).

Sc. (JAM.) ne.Sc. When the quarter ill made its appearance the muckle wheel was set in motion and turned till fire was produced. From this virgin flame fires were kindled in the byres. ... Such a fire was called need fyre, GREGOR Flk-Lore (1881) 186. Cai. In those days [1788], when the stock of any considerable farmer was seized with the murrain, he would send for one of the charm-doctors to superintend the raising of a need-fire. ... Upon any small island, where the stream ... ran on each side, a circular booth was erected, of stone and turf, ... in which a semicircular ... couple of birch ... was set. ... A straight pole was set in the centre of this building, the upper end was fixed by a wooden pin to the top of the couple, and the lower end in an oblong trink in the earth. . . Another pole was set across horizontally, having both ends tapered, one end of which was supported in a hole at the side of the perpendicular pole and the other in a similar hole in the couple leg. The horizontal stick was called the auger, having four short . . . levers fixed in its centre. . . As many men as could be collected . . . set to work with the said auger . . . constantly turning it round by the . . . levers, and others occasionally driving wedges of wood or stone behind the lower end of the upright pole, so as to press it the more on the end of the auger: by this constant friction and pressure, the ends of the auger would take fire, from which a fire would be instantly kindled, and thus the need-fire would be accomplished. The fire in the farmer's house, &c., was immediately quenched with water, a fire kindled from this need-fire, both in the farm-house and offices, and the cattle brought to feel the smoke of this new and sacred fire, which preserved them from the murrain, Agric. Surv. 200-1 (Jam.). Bnff. A kindred superstition was the kindling of neid fyre for curing diseased cattle, Presbytery Bk. (1631-54) xv, ed. 1843. s.Sc. The custom of passing cattle through the 'need-fire' or 'neats-fire,' as it is sometimes called, is still remembered on the Scottish border, although no longer practised, N. & Q. (1866) 3rd S. ix. 263. Slk. While neid-fire kyndlit in hys ee, Hogg Poems (ed. 1865) 79. Rxb. An old shepherd at Singden . . . used to tell how on the last occasion, when the 'need-fire' was delivered to him . . . he set the burning token on the top of a dry stone dyke, and let it go out; declaring he would further such a superstitious observance no longer, N. & Q. ib. n.Cy. This fire . . . was carried from place to place all through this district, as a charm against cattle taking the disease, Henderson Flk-Lore (1879) v; N.Cy.[1] This fire is vulgarly supposed to be caused by an angel striking the wood. Nhb.[1] It was formerly raised in one village and hurriedly carried on from village to village. s.Dur. (J.E.D.), Lakel.[1] Cum.[1]; Cum.[4] During the cattle plague of 1841-2 the need-fire was kindled, and for weeks the fire was kept alive and the cattle were driven through the smoke, W.C.T.H. (1893) 13. col. 3. Wm. People used to cure them [cattle] with the smoke of the 'need fire.' I well remember my father going off on horseback to fetch the fire one evening. He had to go a long way, for he did not get back till quite morning. I think he went somewhere into Yorkshire. . . It was produced by the friction of a steel spindle against wood. They spread barley straw in heaps over a large field . . . and set it alight with the need-fire, N. & Q. ib. 175. n.Yks. Denham Tracts (ed. 1895) 50. w.Yks. Willan List Wds. (1811) (s.v. Toad-bit).

Sc. Some small article, as a marble, a comfit, or other trifle, is put into one hand secretly. The boy then comes up to a companion with both hands closed, and cries, as he revolves the two fists before his friend's eyes: 'Nievie-nievie nick-nack, Which hand will ye tak? Tak the right, tak the wrang. I'll beguile ye if I can.' The fun is in the challenged person choosing the hand in which there is nothing, CHAMBERS Pop. Rhymes (ed. 1870) 117; I played it awa' at neevie-neevie-nick-nack, SCOTT St. Ronan (1824) xxx; To expect . . . that a gambler at cards or dice should stop the ruin of his own or another's fortune, by playing at nivy-nick-nack, Blackw. Mag. (Aug. 1821) 37 (JAM.). Bnff. At Keith this game is played at Christmas, and by two. The stakes are commonly pins. One player conceals a pin, or more if agreed on, in one of his hands. He then closes both hands and twirls them over each other, in front of the other player, and repeats the words: 'Nivvie, nivvie-neek-nack; Filk (or filk han') 'ill ye tack? Tack the richt, tack the left, An' a'll deceave ye gehn I can.' The other player chooses. If he chooses the hand having the stake, he gains it. If he does not, he forfeits the stake. Another form of words is: 'Nivvie nivvie neek-nack, Filk will ye tick-tack? Tack ane, tack twa, Tack the best amo' them a',' GOMME Games (1894) I. 410. Abd. (A.W.) Frf. The article to be bartered would be held in our clenched fists, both hands being shut, and, moving one over the other, the following quatrain would be spoken: 'Neevie, neevie, nick nack, Filk han' wull ye tak'? The richt or the wrang? And I'll beguile ye if I can,' INGLIS Ain Flk. (1898) 112. Fif. If it was a question of sides in a game the lot was cast by the inevitable decision of, 'Nivvi-nivvi-nak-kak! Which hand wull ye tak!' COLVILLE Vernacular (1899) 13. Ayr. The old rhyme common among boys and girls . . . when puzzling each other to find which hand holds the article wanted: 'Kneevie, kneevie, nick knack, What han' will ye tak? Tak the richt or tak the wrang, I'll beguile ye if I can' (JAM., s.v. Knack). Lnk. The more advanced children . . . played at 'Nievie, nievie, nick-nack,' FRASER Whaups (1895) iii. Edb. Neevie, neevie, nick-nack, Stands at the door back [Nursery rhyme], BALLANTINE Deanhaugh (1869) 121. Gall. A person puts a little trifle, such as a button, into one hand, shuts it close, the other hand is also shut; then they both are whirled round and round one another as fast as they can, before the nose of the one who intends to guess what hand the prize is in; and if the guesser be so fortunate as to guess the hand the prize is in, it becomes his property; the whirling of the fists is attended with the following rhyme: 'Neiveie, neiveie, nick, nack, What ane will ye take? The right or the wrang; Guess or it be lang, Plot awa and plan, I'll cheat ye gif I can,' MACTAGGART Encycl. (1824), ed. 1876. N.I.[1] 'Nievy, navy, nick nack. Which han' will ye tak', The right or the wrang, I'll beguile ye if I can.' The rhyme is used in a game played with the closed hands; in one hand of the player is a marble, or any small object; the other is empty. The second player tries to choose the hand that is not empty. Nhb. 'Nivvy, nivvy nick nack, Which hand will ye tak', The reet or the left, or the bonny birds' nest?' These lines used by children in play, the fists being held out and the guesser had to find out in which fist was concealed the marble or plaything (J.H.); Nhb.[1] A coin or other small article is placed in the leef of one hand and passed behind the back. It may be changed into the other hand or not, and when the two hands are brought to the front again the player repeats: 'Neevy, neevy, nick, nack, which wull ye tak? The reet or the wrang; aa'll gie y' it if aa can.' If the guess be correct the nick-nack becomes the property of the successful player. Another version is: 'Neavy, neavy, knick, knack, which hand will ye tak? Tak the reet, tak the wrang; aa'll beguile ye if aa can.' Lakel. Gambling in pins, nuts, &c. The stake-holder, turning his back to the chooser, places the stakes in one hand, then facing around he revolves the hands around each other saying: 'Niffy, niffy, nack, which will ta tack? Thee tack yan an leeve me t'tudder' (B.K.). Cum. Brough lass laikt at neevy-nack, GILPIN Pop. Poetry (1875) 74; A childish way of casting lots: 'Neevy neevy nack, Which will ye tak, The reet or the left? Tell's in a crack' (E.W.P.); Cum.[1] Neevy neevy nack, Whether hand will ta tack, T'topmer or t'lowmer? Cum.[4] Neevy neevy nack, Whether hand willta tack, T'heemer or t'lowmer? That's dog, that's cat. n.Lan.[1] Played by children with marbles, buttons, &c. . . . 'Neavy neavy nack, whedder hand will ta tak?' ? Dev. The beadle, finding a small unowned boy playing surreptitiously at 'nevie-nevie-nick-nack' (with marbles), hurried the offender out of the sacred precincts, MADOX-BROWN Dwale Bluth (1876) bk. I. iii.

In many cases the smaller, and I expect the larger, farmers sow the land with barley and grass, clover, &c., after the turnips are taken off—the grass, clover, &c., being sown between the barley. The barley is harvested and the stuff cut down and the land let lie all the winter, and in the spring the grass grows up afresh and is cut in June and made into hay. The land becomes a 'new-lay' directly the barley is cut (P.H.E.); The snow had not quite gone—patches still lay on the 'new-lays,' Emerson Lagoons (ed. 1896) 62; First year's clover, Sandringham Estate. (7) Sc. Speaking generally, 'New Light' describes the liberal or progressive party in a Church. In Burns' time 'New Light' was the designation given to those clergy of the Established Church who were lax in their confessional views, not evangelical in doctrine, and not very devout in their lives. To their views Burns inclined. But among dissenting churches the New Lights represented liberalism in views tending towards voluntaryism in the relation of Church and State. Towards the middle of the 19th century the term came to represent a difference in one of the Scottish dissenting churches as to the extent of the Atonement, the New Lights representing the reaction against the 'limited' theory associated with Calvinism (A.W.). Frf. The congregation, which belonged to the body who seceded from the Established Church a hundred and fifty years ago, had split, and as the New Lights (now the U.P.'s) were in the majority, the Old Lights, with the minister at their head, had to retire to the commonty, Barrie Licht (1888) iii. Ayr. You bade me write you what they mean By this New-Light, 'Bout which our herds sae oft have been Maist like to fight, Burns *W. 2. Among children a cry for a truce in a game; see below. Cf. Nick, sb.[1]

War. B'ham Wkly. Post (June 10, 1893); War.[2] This very common exclamation in this county amongst boys at play is evidently of great antiquity, and had its origin in times before the Reformation, when St. Nicholas was considered the tutelar saint or patron of children. . . When a boy is hard pressed in any game depending on activity, and perceives his antagonist gaining ground upon him, he cries out 'Nicklas,' upon which he is entitled to a suspension of the play for the moment; and on any occasion of not being ready, wanting, for instance, to fasten his shoe, or remedy any accidental inconvenience, the cry of 'Nicklas' entitles him to protection or safeguard. This was often expressed in the words 'I cry Nicklas.'

3. A name given to the smallest pig of the litter. Glo. N. & Q. (1881) 6th S. iii. 249.

NICK, sb.[1] Nhp. War. [nik.] A boys' call when a truce is required in a game; see below. Cf. Nicholas, 2.

Nhp.[1] If a boy is hard pressed, in any game depending upon activity, . . and perceives his antagonist gaining ground upon him; or if he stops to fasten his shoe, or remedy any other accidental inconvenience, and cries out 'Nick! Nick!' he is entitled to protection, and a temporary suspension of the game. . . 'Nick! Nick!' is therefore an abbreviated invocation to St. Nicholas, the patron saint of children, for protection, and is now used without the most remote idea of its import. War.[3]

NICK, sb.[2] Sc. Also Sus. [nik.] 1. A name for the devil. Cf. Old Nick, s.v. Old, 1.

Sc. Courtiers . . . NICKERBORE, sb. Yks. Also written nicka-, nico- w.Yks.[2]; and in form nicky- ib. [ni·kəboə(r).] See below.

w.Yks. O should as sooin a thowt a oud Nickabore prayin as him, BYWATER Gossips, 5; w.Yks.[2] This precisely represents the name, often heard in the discourse of the common people, of a poor half-witted man, who would sometimes act and talk shrewdly enough. In Stannington people say: 'Tell Nickybore, don't tell me,' which is equivalent to saying, 'tell that to your grandmother; tell it to the marines.' When two people are walking together, another will say, 'There they go: like Nickerbore and Mally Bent that went agateards all neet!' 'Nickerbore' is probably a water-goblin. Amongst the tales told about him is one which relates how he sat on the wrong side of a branch which overhung a stream to saw it off, and how, in consequence, he fell into the water.

NICKERERS, sb. pl. Sc. [ni·kərərz.] A slang name for new shoes, from their making a creaking noise. See Nick, v.[4]

NICKY-NAN-NIGHT, sb. Cor. Also written nicka-Cor.[2] The evening preceding Shrove Tuesday; see below.

On the day which precedes Shrove Tuesday, about the dusk of the evening, it is the custom for boys, and in some cases for those above the age of boys, to prowl about the streets with short clubs, and to knock loudly at every door, running off to escape detection on the slightest sign of a motion within. If, however, no attention be excited, and especially if any article be discovered negligently exposed or carelessly guarded, then the things are carried away, and on the following morning are seen displayed in some conspicuous place, to expose the disgraceful want of vigilance supposed to characterise the owner. The time when this is practised is called 'Nicky-nan-night,' and the individuals concerned are supposed to represent some imps of darkness, that seize on, and expose unguarded moments, Reports R. Instit. (1842), in Couch Hist. Polperro (1871) 151; On the following eve [Shrove Tuesday], the clubs were again in requisition; but on this occasion the blows on the door were in time to the following chant—'Nicky nicky nan, Give me some pancake, and then I'll be gone. But if you give me none I'll throw a great stone, And down your door shall come,' Couch ib. 152; Cor.[12]

He who can play three in a straight line may then take off any one of his adversary's, where he pleases, till one, having lost all his men loses the game, Gomme Games (1894) I. 418. Nhp.[1] (s.v. Merells). War.[2] Now played on a board instead of the turf. 'Ploughmen use white and black beans to distinguish their men; the great object being to get three of them in a row, or, as it is called, to have a "click-clack and an open row." In order to do this you are allowed to take up your adversary's pieces as at draughts, or else to hem them up until they cannot move,' Wise Shakspere (1861); War.[3] Played either with slate and pencil, with stones, or on morris boards, which, I am told, were often kept in s.War. by the village blacksmith, around whose hearth the young men of the village played the game, certainly in quite recent years, and probably still play it. se.Wor.[1] Each competitor has nine 'men,' which may consist of stones, pegs, blocks of wood, &c. A board called a morris board is generally used for the game, in which holes are bored (to a geometrical pattern) in which to place the 'men.' Nrf. Hone Every-day Bk. (1826) II. 1661. Hmp.[1] (13) Sh.I. The mother is further instructed to 'tig the nine mothers' maet' for the bairn's restoration—i.e., nine mothers whose first born were sons are each solicited for an offering of three articles of food, to be used during the convalescence of the patient who has been thus snatched from the power of the trows, Spence Flk-Lore (1899) 148. (14) Cmb.[1] At Wisbech. 'Missus did allus then unto me tell, "Be in by the sound of the nine-o'clock-bell."' (15) Sc. Played by two. Nine O's are arranged on a slate or slip of paper in three parallel rows. A player asks his opponent to draw a line connecting any two of the O's which the player selects. This he does until all the O's are connected with lines. But the opponent, in drawing lines, must not cut or cross lines already drawn. If he succeeds in connecting the nine O's without doing so, he gains the game. Each O can only have two lines, or be used only twice to start from or arrive at with a line. The player may render it difficult if not impossible for his opponent to connect all the O's with crossing lines (A.W.). (16) Nhp.[1] (s.v. Merells); Nhp.[2] (17) w.Yks. (A.C.) Merls). Glo. Largely practised by boys and even older people over thirty years ago, but is now, as far as I know, entirely disused. Two persons play. Each must have twelve pegs or twelve pieces of anything which can be distinguished. The Morris was usually marked on a board or stone with chalk, and consists of twenty-four points. The pegs are put down one at a time alternately upon any point upon the Morris, and the first person who makes a consecutive row of three impounds one of his opponent's pegs. The pegs must only be moved on the lines. The game is continued until one or other of the players has only two pegs left, when the game is won, Midl. Games, 1st S. 120, in Gomme ib. 417. (20) Dor. Very much used on the whole of the chalky district for the purpose of making hollows or drills on land which has been long ploughed and baked down by the fold, Marshall Review (1817) V. 272. NOAG, v. and sb. Lan. Also in form nogre. [nōg, noəg.] 1. v. To hit the knuckles by 'flirting' a marble against them. See Knog, v. (q.v.)

The last player, left in the game of 'noag,' is 'nogued' by all the others, i.e. he holds his knuckles on the ground and each boy comes within a few inches and flirts his own taw with all the force he can against the boy's knuckles two, three, or four times, as may be agreed upon by the boys when they begin to play (S.W.); Lan.[1]

2. sb. A game at marbles; see below; also in comp. Noag-hole.

A game of marbles played by two or more boys, who first make a small hole in the ground, and then by 'flirting' at a distance of about three feet each boy tries to put his own taw into the hole and to keep the others out of it. They toss or ballot in some form for place, and then play in turns; if one boy in playing hits the taw of another, he goes on again continuously trying to drive all the other taws away from the hole, then plays for the hole; if he succeeds in getting into it he is out; and so on till all the boys are out except the last (S.W.); (C.J.B.); Lan.[1]

NORTHUMBERLAND, sb. Nhb.[1] In comb. (1) Lord Northumberland's Arms, a black eye; (2) Northumberland pipes, a small kind of bagpipes.

(1) Lord Northumberland's Arms has for the last two hundred years been synonymous with a black eye. We may doubt whether the notion arose in the black and red which filled the spectacles-like badge of Percy or in the fusils, Arch. Æliana, New S. IV. 164. (2) Peculiar to the county of Northumberland. They are played with a pair of bellows, which are 'oxtered' in the right arm. There were formerly four, but are now three drones and a chanter. In the three-drone pipe the largest and smallest drones are tuned in octave, whilst the intermediate drone is tuned in fifth above the lowest drone; they thus sound the notes G, D, G, or their equivalents. The chanter is closed at the end; and, in playing, each hole is covered except the one which sounds; the lifted finger has consequently to be put down and another finger raised, in order to produce the succeeding note; hence the staccato effect which gives a peculiar character to the pipe tunes.

NORTING, adj. Dev. [nō·tin.] Empty-headed; stupid, careless, good-for-nothing; a derivative of 'nought.'

Whot's take notice ov zich a norting gert theng as 'er is vor? Hewett Peas. Sp. (1892) 9; Reports Provinc. (1895).

NUMER, sb. ? Obs. e.An.[1] A dial. form of 'number'; see below.

Not that we substitute it in general usage for number. We use that word as other people do. It seems, in fact, as if, having got the word 'numerous,' we looked back to find the substantive belonging to it, not knowing 'number' to be so. And when we have got it, give it a stronger signification; for by 'numer' we always mean a great number. 'What a numer on 'em there was!'

[Nowmere, numerus, Prompt.]

NUMERATE, v. n.Lin.[1] [niu·mərēt.] To increase in number.

O

O. I. Apart from the influence of neighbouring sounds, OE. o in closed syllables has generally become open ǫ in the modern dialects.

II. In Sc., Irel. and Eng. n. of the Humber, OE. o in open syllables has generally become ō or respectively uə. In w. and s.Yks. and in the district round about Blackburn in Lan., it has become ǫi. In the remaining parts of Eng. it has fallen together with OE. ā, that is, it has become ō, or uə (oə); see Vol. I. 1.

III. The normal development of OE. ō is:—
1. Long ū in Lan., I.Ma., Chs. (see 6), n.Stf., Der. (also iu, ʊu), Not., Lin., Rut., Nhp., War. (also iu), Wor. (also iu), Shr. (see 4), Pem., Glo., Oxf., Brks., Bck., Bdf., Hrt., Hnt., Cmb., Ess., Ken., Sus., Hmp., I.W., Wil., Dor., e.Som.
2. In ne.Sc. it has become ī; in the remaining parts of Sc. it has generally become ü (rarely ū) or respectively œ.
3. ṻ or œ̄ in Nrf., Suf., w.Som., Dev., Cor.
4. iu in Cum. (also iə), Wm., nw.Yks., ne.Lan. (see 1), Flt., Dnb., Stf. (except e.Stf.), s.Der., Lei., w.War., n.Wor., ne.Shr.
5. iə in Nhb. (rarely iu), Dur. (also iu), Cum. (also iu), n., ne., m. and se.Yks.
6. ui in w. and s.Yks. 7. œu in s.Chs. 8. ʊu in sw.Der., e.Stf.

(1) Not. A custom now dying out existed . . . on the twenty-ninth of May, or 'Oak and Nettle day,' as it is termed. The rising generation sally out in the morning, their caps and button-holes adorned with sprigs of oak. They also provide themselves with a bunch of nettles. They request all persons they meet with 'to show your oak.' . . Supposing they are unprovided . . . their face, neck, and hands are well nettled, Flk-Lore Jrn. (1884) II. 381. (2) Dev.[4] There need be no apples on the sprig. (3) Nhp.[1] On this day it was formerly the custom for all the principal families in the town of Northampton to place a large branch of oak over the door of their houses, or in their balconies, in remembrance of the restoration of Charles the Second. The oak-boughs are gradually disappearing; but the corporate body still goes in procession to All Saints' church, accompanied by the boys and girls of the different charity schools, each of them having a sprig of oak, with a gilt oak-apple placed in the front of their dress; and, should the season be unpropitious, and oak-apples be scarce, small gilded potatoes are substituted. . . Some villagers in the country notice the day, by decorating their houses with branches of oak, or by children carrying them about in their hands. War.[3] Houses were decorated with boughs or sprigs of oak bearing oak-apples. Boys wore the latter in their coats. Those who neglected or were unable to provide themselves with this decoration were whipped about the hands and face, by their fellows, with stinging nettles. Hnt. (T.P.F.) Dor. The 29th of May, Oak-apple Day, was called Shicsack Day, when all loyal urchins were expected to display a bit of oak in their hats or caps, Longman's Mag. (Mar. 1889) 517. w.Som.[1] It is still the custom for all the public-houses, and many private ones, to fasten a green bough of oak at the side of the outer door. When they can be got, oak-apples are stuck on this bough, often covered with gold-leaf. . . Farm boys also stick sprays of oak with oak-apples if procurable in their hats, while the horses always have to be 'trimmed' with oak on King Charles's day. (4) Chs.[13] s.Chs.[1] Oa·k-aachŭrn. (5) s.Chs.[1] Oa·k-bau. War.[3] (6) Shr. On this day, branches of oak bearing 'oak-apples' or 'oak-balls' are hung at the doors of many houses in Shrewsbury; about Newport the cart-horses are adorned with oak-boughs, and in many places the railway-engines are similarly decorated. Many people in all ranks keep up the custom of wearing sprays of oak with 'balls,' if possible, on this day. Young men and lads wear an oak-ball and a few leaves in their hats, and about Market Drayton I am told that a boy who shows himself without a bit of oak is apt to receive some sort of chastisement from his companions. The National school children in many places beat those who wear no oak with stinging nettles, BURNE Flk-Lore (1883-1886) 365. War.[2] It is the custom to wear an oak-ball in the hat or buttonhole on May 29, and to decorate horses with the same. OASTE, sb. Obs. Nhb. The name given to the mariner or stranger who came to buy coals at Newcastle. See Hoastmen.

Nhb.[1] The vendors of coal, &c., were the Incorporated Company of Hoastmen, and their clients or customers were 'oastes.' The 'seal of the fraternity of the Ostmen of the town of Newcastle-upon-Tyne' represents an oaste advancing, hat in hand, to meet the coal merchant. The Hoastman extends his right hand to grasp that of the oaste, with the salutation 'Welcome, my oste.' 'It appears from the earliest entries in the books of this society (the Merchant Adventurers), that the stranger arriving at the port of Tyne to buy coals is called "the oaste",' BRAND Hist Newc. (1789) II. 270 note.

Here he stands and takes his ease, Stamps his foot and claps his hands, And turns around to view the land. Waiting for a partner, waiting for a partner, Open the ring and take one in, And kiss him (or her) as he (or she) enters, GOMME Games (1898) II. 8–9. Yks. See the farmer sow his seed, See he stamps and takes them in, Stamps his foot and claps his hand, And turns him round to view the land. O! waiting for a partner, Open the ring and take one in. Now you're married, &c., ib. 8. w.Yks. Waitin' for a partner, Waitin' for a partner, Open the ring and take one in, And now you've got your partner. . . . Now you're married you must obey, &c. In the Wakefield version, a little boy is placed in the centre of the ring first; he chooses a girl out of the ring at the singing of the third line, and kisses her. They stand hand in hand while the others sing the next verse, ib. 9; In a Sheffield version, .. four young men stand in the middle of the ring with their hands joined. These four dance round the first lines. After 'views his lands,' these four choose sweethearts, or partners, from the ring. The eight join hands and sing the remaining four lines. The four young men then join the larger ring, and the four girls remain in the centre and choose partners next time, ib. Lan. ib. 3. I.Ma. Oats and beans, barley and groats, &c. . . Slip the ring and take one in, And kiss her when you get her in. Now you're married you must agree, &c. . . When the kiss is given all the children forming the ring clap their hands, ib. 5, 6–10. n.Stf. In the Tean version, the children turn round with their backs to the one in the centre, and stand still when singing 'waiting for a partner,' ib. 9–10. Not. Oats and beans and barley-corns, you or I or any one else, You or I or any one else, oats or beans or barley-corns, &c., ib. 5. Lin. The children in the Lincolnshire Wold village playing . . . and dancing round as they sang the following words: 'A-waitin' fur a pardner, A-waitin' fur a pardner, You an' I an' iv'ryone knows How whoats an' beans an' barley grows. Fost tha farmer saws 'is seed, Then he stans an' teks 'is ease, Stamps 'is feet an' claps 'is 'ands, And turns him round to view tha lands. A-waitin' fur a pardner, &c. . . Now you're married you must obaä, You must be true to all you saä, You must be kind and very good, And help y'er wife to chop tha wood. A-waitin' fur a pardner,' &c. In the dance the boys and girls form a ring. A boy stands in the centre, singing with the rest, as they dance around. There is no particular order, but generally at the second singing of the chorus the 'gentleman' chooses a 'lady' partner, and both stand in the centre, singing with those composing the ring, 'Now you're married,' &c. Sometimes 'gentleman' kisses partner. When the whole song is finished, sometimes the gentleman makes one of the ring, and the lady remains in the centre and chooses a partner; sometimes both join the ring and a fresh boy goes into the centre and waits for a partner. . . The children in the neighbourhood of Horncastle yet play at this game. It is probably common to other parts, N. & Q. (1891) 7th S. xii. 493. nw.Lin. In a version from Kirkby-on-the-Bain: . . 'There is no proper commencement of this song. The children begin with "A-waitin' fur a pardner," or "Oats and beans," just as the spirit moves them, but "A-waitin" is the usual beginning here,' GOMME ib. 10. Nhp. Does you or I or anie one knowe Where oates and beanes and barlie growe, The farmer comes and sowes ye seede, &c. . . Open the ringe and take mee in, Make haste and choose your partner, &c., Nhp. N. & Q. I. 163 in GOMME ib. 3. Shr. Form a ring, with one in the middle; move slowly round, and 'suit the action to the words' in italics. Chorus. Oats and beans and barley grow! Oats and beans and barley grow! Do you or I or any one know How oats and beans and barley grow? First the farmer sows his seed, Then he stands and takes his ease, Stamps his foot and claps his hands, Then turns round to view the land. Waiting for a partner, waiting for a partner! Open the ring and take one in! (Another girl enters the ring, they close up and move round again.) Chorus. Now you are married you must obey, You must be true to all you say, You must be kind, you must be good, And help your wife to chop the wood! BURNE Flk-Lore (1883) 608. Nrf. Hops or beans or barley corn, You or I or anyone all: First the farmer sows his seed, &c. Waiting for a partner, a partner, a partner, He opened the ring and called one in, And now he's got a partner, &c., GOMME ib. 7. Hmp. Oats and beans and barley corn, &c., Waiting for a partner. Open the gate and let her come out, And see the one you love the best. Now we're merry and wish you joy, First the girl and then the boy, Seven e.An. The players stand in a row. The child at the head of the row says, 'My son Obadiah is going to be married, twiddle your thumbs,' suiting the action to the word by clasping the fingers of both hands together, and rapidly 'twiddling' the thumbs. The next child repeats both words and actions, and so on all along the row, all the players continuing the 'twiddling.' The top child repeats the words, adding (very gravely) 'Fall on one knee'; the whole row follows suit as before (still twiddling their thumbs). The top child repeats from the beginning, adding, 'Do as you see me,' and the rest of the children follow suit, as before. Just as the last child repeats the words, the top child falls on the child next to her, and all go down like a row of ninepins, GOMME Games (1898) II. 13-14. Lon. ib. 14.

ODIN, sb. : Obs. Or.I. In phr. (1) the black stone of Odin, a large black stone; see below; (2) the promise of Odin, a promise of marriage supposed to be particularly binding.

(1) Towards the north side of the island [of Shapinshay], and by the seaside, is another large stone, called the Black Stone of Odin. Instead of standing erect like the one above mentioned, it rests its huge side on the sand, and raises its back high above the surrounding stones, from which it seems to be altogether different in quality, Statist. Acc. XVII. 235 (JAM.). (2) At some distance from the semi-circle, to the right, stands a stone by itself, eight feet high, three broad, nine inches thick, with a round hole on the side next the Lake. . . A young man had seduced a girl under promise of marriage. . . The young man was called before the Session; the Elders were particularly severe. Being asked by the minister the cause of so much rigour, they answered, 'You do not know what a bad man this is; he has broke the promise of Odin.' Being further asked what they meant by the promise of Odin, they put him in mind of the stone at Stenhouse with the round hole in it, and added that it was customary, when promises were made, for the contracting parties to join hands through this hole; and the promises so made were called the promises of Odin, Trans. Soc. Antiq. Sc. I. 263 (ib.); S. & Ork.[1] A particular sort of contract, accounted very sacred by some of the inhabitants of Orkney, the contracting parties joining hands through an orifice in the 'black stone of Odin.'

[N. & Q. (1885) 6th S. xii. 167.] (105) w.Yks.[5] It commences by a single boy, who, starting from an appointed place, pursues his playfellows with clasped hands until he has succeeded in touching or 'tigging' one of them. The two again retreat to their den, whence, having given one warning, they again start with joined hands till they succeed in catching another, who joins them in like manner. Thus the chain becomes gradually longer, while the number of those at liberty is continually diminishing. But as the chain becomes more extended, it becomes also more unwieldy, and the tactics of the pursued are not only to escape from it by flight, but, as opportunity offers, to rush in upon and break through it, in which case all those composing it are compelled to make a precipitate retreat, pursued by the others, who lay upon them with knotted handkerchiefs. (106, 107) Nhp.[1] (108) Chs.[1] (109) [A ring is formed by children joining hands; one child, who represents Sir Roger, lays [sic] down on the ground in the centre of the ring with his head covered with a handkerchief. The ring stands still and sings the verses. When the second verse ['There grew an old apple-tree over his head'] is begun, a child from the ring goes into the centre and stands by Sir Roger, to represent the apple-tree. At the fourth verse ['There came an old woman a-picking them up'] another child goes into the ring and pretends to pick up the fallen apples. Then the child personating Sir Roger jumps up and knocks the child personating the old woman, beating her out of the ring. She goes off hobbling on one foot pretending to be hurt, Gomme ib. 22.] Ant. Poor Toby is dead and he lies in his grave, &c., ib. 21. Yks. (1) Ltr. All players sit round the fire and put out their right feet. The master of the game repeats—'Onery, twoery, dickery, dary, Wispy, spindey, spoke of the lindey, Old Johnny Hairy, Crap in.' Each word is repeated to a man; and when the leader comes to 'Crap in,' the man specified draws in his foot. When all have drawn in their feet but one, this one must then kneel down, and his eyes being blindfolded, the master of the game puts his elbow on his back and strikes him with his elbow or fist, saying—'Hurley, burley, trump the trace, The cow ran through the market-place. Simon Alley hunt the buck, How many horns stand up?' at the same time holding up several fingers. The man kneeling down has to guess the number. If he guesses correctly, the master of the game takes his place. If he fails to guess, he is kept down and another man goes and strikes his back, and so on, Gomme Games (1898) II. 449–50. (2) se.Wor.[1] (3) Chs.[3] Like a young girl of eighteen, who sold a very old gander to a purchaser. He reproached her with having told him a lie in saying the bird was young. OMNIGAD(D)RUM, sb. Obs. Sc. Also in form omnigatherum. A name given to the unincorporated craftsmen of a burgh.

In the larger burghs of Scotland there were three classes of burgesses: the merchants or guild brethren, the incorporated craftsmen, and the unincorporated craftsmen. The last named were deemed a lower order by the other two sections and when spoken of as a class were called the 'Omnigatherum.' In the burghs generally this name was only occasionally used, but in the royal burgh of Stirling it was almost the only name given to that class during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries (JAM. Suppl.); The toun sall pay yeirlie £4, guild brethren £20, the crafts £20, the maltmen £10, and the omnigadrum, viz. the wrichtis, maissones, coupares, litstares . . . the soume of ten pundis yeirlie, Burgh Rec. Stirling (1642) (ib.).

[The same word as colloq. E. omnigatherum, a miscellaneous collection of persons or things.]

(b) Dmf., Gall. Peculiar to the low countries of Scotland. A circle is drawn and neatly divided into six parts; on one of these is cut another circle of ten feet diameter,—this is called the 'Ins' and the large circle the 'Outs.' A stone, or branch of a tree, is set up at these marks in the large circle;—these are termed 'Dools.' The boys divide in equal numbers and cast lots for the Ins, which is the seat of glory and heroism. The fortunate party all step into the Ins and the other party run to the Outs; a boy then steps forth from either side. To begin the game—the boy in the Outs throws a ball of yarn covered with leather or party-coloured thread so as gently to light on the other's hand, who stands with it open, and in a swinging attitude, in order to strike the ball. This he does with great dexterity, avoiding the outer party and preventing them from catching it as it flies: which should one of them catch loses the Ins. The boy on striking away the ball runs to the first dool and touches it with his foot. One of his fellows stands forth in the Ins, striking back the ball, while his partner gains another dool, and so on till he recovers the Ins. The other one who struck away the ball in his absence runs the same career. But should the ball be caught, or while he is running to reach his dool should he be struck by the ball from the outer party, the Ins are lost and the enemy rushes in to the evacuated dominions, CROMEK Remains (1810) 253-4. The late Rev. W. A. Leighton . . . found the name applied to lands lying outside the lord's demesne at Moreton Corbet. The records of the Court Baron of Holgate twice mention an outrack, Shreds and Patches (June 26, 1889); Shr.[1] The name still lingers on, but the outrack, as such, is a thing of the past. There were three outracks in the parish of Church Pulverbatch, viz., Pulverbatch, Wilderley, and Wrentnall. They were uninclosed lands leading from the cultivated ground to open common. . . The farmers held the privilege of turning their animals—sheep, cattle, or ponies—into these outracks, and from thence to the hills or common. When the flocks and herds were taken off the common, they were driven into the outracks, which were then closed at the opposite end by a gate or barrier of some kind, in order to keep the animals within bounds, while the work of separating them was carried on by their respective owners. The outracks are now enclosed.

3. An enclosure surrounding a pig-sty. N.Cy.[1] 4. v. To wander, ramble, stroll. n.Yks.[2] Hence Oot-reeaker, sb. a stro'ler. ib. 5. To let cattle out once a day on rough land or moors. Cum. (E.W.P.)

OUTRIGGER, sb. Wil. An addition to a wagon to increase its carrying capacity. Cf. overlayer.

Wil.[1] The waggons . . . seldom have any overlayers or outriggers, either at the ends or sides, Davis Agric. (1811) xxxviii. (s.v. Overlayer).

OUTRING, sb. Sc. A curling term: an outward bias given to a stone by touching the outside of another. Cf. inring, outwick.

Sc. Blue represents stones of one side or rink—red represents opponents. By striking the blue stone on outer edge to drive it towards the tee, the played stone would fly off at a tangent and the other go towards the tee. This is known as an 'outring' (C.H.E.). Gall. To take an outring is generally allowed to be more difficult than taking an inring, Macfaggart Encycl. (1824) 369, ed. 1876; A point on the periphery of a curling stone on the side furthest from the tee. To 'take the outring' of a stone is for the curler to propel the stone he is instructed to play so as to strike such a point on a stone already lying in position near the tee—altering such position, as also the course of his own stone after impact (J.M.).

3. Phr. to turn a person his pad, to turn him off; to dismiss him. w.Yks.[1] 4. Obs. Dried cow-dung, formerly collected for fuel. e.An.[1] 5. A weight of yarn; see below.

w.Som.[1] Used by sellers of woollen yarn. The square-shaped package of yarn in which it is generally made up for sale, consisting of twelve bundles or hanks, and each bundle consisting of a great many skeins varying in number according to the fineness of the yarn—a skein being always a fixed number of yards, and the 'pad' a fixed weight. By spinners. A bundle of yarn consisting of twenty-four small hanks, each consisting of four skeins, each skein measuring 360 yards; consequently a pad of yarn always represented the same number of yards, whatever its size or weight. Before the days of machinery, but far into the nineteenth century, the country manufacturers gave out wool to be spun at home, by spinsters, and the size of the thread required was fixed by ordering the pad to be spun to a certain weight, or in other words—24 × 4 × 360 = 34,560 yards, to be got out of so many lbs. of wool. In some factories even now this mode is still retained, and instead of spinning 20's or 30's they spin at so many lbs. per pad. n.Dev. Or else tha tedst net carry whome thy pad, Exm. Scold. (1746) l. 113.

6. Wool-combing term: a piece of iron plate to which the combs are attached.

w.Yks. (E.G.) w.Som.[1] Of a peculiar shape, made to screw into a post, and used by a hand wool-comber to hold one of his combs firmly in a horizontal position, while he works the wool in it with the other comb, and then draws out the sliver.

7. Comp. (1) Pad-ale, ale bought for use in the combing-shop; (2) -heel, the stud standing out at right angles to the 'pad-post,' and into which the shaft end of the comb fits; (3) -hook, a straight piece of iron turned up at the point, driven firmly into the 'pad-post' about 4 feet from the floor, to hold one of the combs; (4) -neb or -nib, the stud at the end of the pad on to which the comb is dropped after the shaft end is fixed on the 'pad-heel'; (5) -post, a long upright post into which the pad to hold the comb is screwed.

(1) w.Yks. This was generally purchased by (a) fines levied for breach of their own regulations; (b) gifts from visitors (J.T.). (2) w.Yks. (E.W.) (3) w.Yks. (J.T.) (4) w.Yks. (E.W.), (E.G.) (5) w.Yks. An owd oak padpost remains to this day, PRESTON Yksman. (1880) 23.

To have seen it was of course a portent of various disasters; w.Yks.[5] It is said to have been customary with it to pace in front of a house where a death was soon to happen; and a frequent employment was to meet those who were going to a sick person's house by night, and go before them to the door where the noise of its step would cease. It was said to be sometimes invisible, but at other times both to be seen as well as heard, padding lightly in the rear of persons. . . . It is said too to have 'roared,'—the noise made being totally unlike that made by any other animal. It was in size said to be somewhat larger than a sheep, and to be long and smooth-haired. Sometimes the trail of a chain would be heard accompanying the light, quick pad of the feet. Cor. This mysterious visitor always kept the same distance ahead. 2. Phr. (1) a pan to parch peas on, obs., see below; (2) pan and cover cakes, currant tea-cakes kneaded with butter and cream; also called Fat rascals (q.v.); (3) brought up or reared with the pan and the spoon, brought up by hand, not suckled.

(1) Brks. On Shrove Tuesday children used to go round this village [Sunningwell] in the dusk, singing—'Beef and bacon's Out of season, I want a pan to parch my peas on'; after which they threw stones at all people's doors, which made them shut their doors on that evening. This custom still partially exists, but the verses are altered, Murray Handbk. Oxf. (1894) 86. (2) n.Yks.[2] (3) Cum.[1] When a child or young animal is brought up without being suckled, it is reared by the aid of a pan to warm the milk, and a spoon to be fed with; Cum.[4] Wm. He was browt up wi t'pan an' t'speun (B.K.).

3. A vessel for containing water.

n.Yks.[1] Not necessarily or usually shallow; for instance, the ordinary garden water-pot is always called 'water-pan.'

4. A salt-pan; a large vessel or tank in which the brine is evaporated.

Nhb.[1] The word frequently occurs in place-names, as in Howden Pans, Hartley Pans, &c. Chs. The pans used in Cheshire, for the evaporating of the salt brine, are now made of wrought iron, Marshall Review (1818) II. 91; Chs.[1] They vary in size, the smaller ones being 30 feet long by 15 feet in breadth; large ones reaching to 100 feet in length by 30 feet in breadth. They are set upon brick walls with a row of furnaces at one end and a chimney at the other.

Hence (1) Pan-cutters, sb. pl., obs., officers appointed in the salt-making towns to measure the 'pans,' to see that they were of the standard dimensions; (2) -house, sb. the building in which the salt-pan is placed; (3) -picks, sb. pl. strong, long-headed hammers, used when the 'pan' is 'let out,' i. e. not at work; (4) -scale, (5) -scratch, sb. the thick scale that forms on the bottom of a pan; (6) -wood, sb., obs., small coals used chiefly in evaporating sea-water in salt-pans.

(1) Chs.[12] (2) Chs. The different pans are usually partitioned out from each other, and there is a separate pan-house to each pan, Marshall Review (1818) II. 92. (3, 4) Chs.[1] (5) Chs. On these, and parallel to the couples, were laid the kaibers, pieces of trees split with axe, or of bog-fir. Such a roof was called pan and kaiber, Gregor Flk-Lore (1881) 50.

9. A hard or impenetrable subsoil; the bottom or bed of the land.

Rs. In many places a black pan, hard as iron ore, runs in a stratum of two or three inches thick, Statist. Acc. VI. 184 (Jam.). Bnff. It is a light black soil, and under it an obstinate pan. Owing to this pan in some places the fields retain the rains long, ib. IV. 360. Lin. An agricultural term for an incrustation, ferruginous apparently, found under the surface soil, impenetrable to tree roots, also to water, Brookes Tracts Gl. sw.Lin.[1] They'll do no good without you break thruff the pan. Nhp.[1] Brks. A sort of iron conglomerate lying between two and three feet below the surface of the ground which has to be broken up before a crop can be obtained, Hughes Hist. Windsor Forest. e.An.[12] Nrf. What Norfolk farmers call the pan, or that subsidence of the marle or clay which always forms immediately under the path of the plough, Young Annals Agric. (1784-1815) V. 133; In light land, the moisture is more preserved by having a pan at the bottom, Marshall Review (1811) III. 338. Suf. Rainbird Agric. (1819) 297, ed. 1849. [At first the plough ran upon the pan, which it seemed impossible to penetrate, Stephens Farm Bk. (ed. 1849 II. 665.]

10. v. Of land: to harden or form a hard crust on the surface. Also with down.

w.Mid. If you get fooling about with that runny ground in the wet, you'll have it all pan down so as you can't do anything with it (W.P.M.). e.An.[1] Suf. Rainbird Agric. (1819) 297, ed. 1849.

The practice of confession has ceased, but the custom of ringing the bell still remains; Nhp.[2] War.[2]; War.[3] This was said to be the signal for preparing pancakes. It was also the signal for a sudden shout and rush for the school doors in the village schools. School was then broken up for the day, and after dinner the boys assembled and kicked a football across country over hedge and ditch until they were tired. Brks. N. & Q. (1852) 1st S. ix. 324, 504. Bdf. (J.W.B.), Hnt. (T.P.F.) (2) w.Yks.[5] On 'Pancake,' or 'Shrove Tuesday,' 'Pancākes' are an article of universal consumption at dinner. They are gen. eaten hot with treacle; being served as they are taken out of the pan. . . An hour before noon on this day, it is the practice of juveniles to assemble in numbers, bringing with them old tin cans, or anything in the tin line, and each a cudgel, and to go round to all the dame and public schools in or out of the district, and beat them before the school-house door, repeating a short 'nomony' the while, when the master or mistress allows the scholars to leave, whereupon, re-inforcing the troop, they company together on to other places, where the beating-out ceremony is renewed, followed by a like result, the troop cheering lustily as each school turns out, until the hour of noon, when they make the best of their way home to enjoy their pancakes. The rest of the day is a holiday, and the game of shuttlecock forms the amusement, in which others than children take part. Nhp.[1] War.[2] School-children, demanding a holiday, say: 'Pancake-day, Pancake-day, If you don't give us a holiday, we'll all run away.' Oxf. (G.O.), Hnt. (T.P.F.) e.An.[1] Ill luck betides the family in which pancakes are not served up on that day. w.Som.[1] (3) n.Cy. Three days in this week had their peculiar dishes, viz.
